Track Package

A clean, multi-carrier package tracking tool that doesn't suck to look at.

PACKAGE TRACKER

Was a user experience project, part design study, part love letter to the chaos of deliveries at my dad's shop.
I wanted a simple, clean way to track
packages without clicking through eBay, Amazon, emails, and stupid apps just to figure out when the things that make money are gonna be there.
Most carrier sites suck; this one doesn't.

The screenshot shows a web interface titled "Track Your Package" in a large, bold, blue font. Below the title, there is a text input field with the placeholder "Paste your tracking number here" and a light blue button labeled "Next". To the right of the input field, there is a red button labeled "Skip Tutorial". Below the input field, there is a dropdown menu labeled "Select Carrier" and a text input field labeled "Enter package name (optional)". At the bottom of the form, there is a large blue button labeled "Track Package".

A flex of my UX and UI skills, one of the perfect products that are self motivated because I WANT a product like this.
